AFD to go after liquor profit increase

"In unity there is strength"—Aesop

As all holders of SDD licenses know, there hasn’t been an increase in liquor discounts in over 20 years. Your costs of doing business keep going up but your liquor discount remains the same.

The Associated Food Dealers of Michigan is going all out to get retailers an increase. Your discount is currently 17% and we want it increased to 20%, or the alternative, a 17% discount with no maximum retail price. This will not happen overnight as we expect a great deal of resistance. We anticipate that this process will take between 9 - 18 months to accomplish, but we won’t rest until it happens!

Where do you fit in and what can you do? Become a member of AFD. We know that many of you are already members and we thank you for your loyalty. Yet there are many of you that are not. We need you as a member to make sure the MLCC knows that there is a unified effort behind this movement. You may be called upon to write letters and make telephone calls to legislators and others to ensure that they know that we are serious about the need for this increase.

Why do we think this effort will be successful? With your help, AFD will dedicate the time, the money and the people power to get the job done. Just as we did when AFD was the only association to step up and stop the MLCC from doing away with the half-mile rule. And AFD is on the forefront of other MLCC issues like allowing wine tastings in your stores. Together we will make a difference.

Economic upturn is predicted for U.S. as we learn from the past

By Joe Sarafa
AFD President

On September 11, the United States of America changed; our economy, our politics, our culture, and our lifestyles. Some of these changes will be temporary, while others more lasting, and some even permanent.

At the National Grocers Association Convention 2002, February 11 - 14 in Las Vegas, a two-part session featured the respected economist Stuart Varney, formerly the host of CNN’s Money Line News Hour and currently the CNBC commentator for the Wall Street Journal.

His analysis of our nation provided a valuable business-planning framework for the audience. Varney believes that our economy is in a rebound state, which is good news for us all.

Three major economic impacts of 2001

To set the stage, Varney said there were three occurrences that greatly impacted our economy last year and lead us into a recession:

1. The rise and fall of NASDAQ - where $4 trillion of investor wealth was wiped out
2. Globalization - world trade doubled in the 1990s
3. September 11 - Events of this day pushed our economy overboard

Varney also said that the U.S. economy had a lot going for it before this recent recession. Employment played a key role. While unemployment in the U.S. was below 4 percent, Western Europe has experienced double-digit rates for many years. The U.S. also has a lower unemployment rate than Japan.

One key reason is the computer industry – which is an American industry. Computers hold the future for our economy and we are in the forefront of the industry. Look to nano technology – miniatures – computers – to be the next big trend.

Inflation, too, is almost nonexistent. Our current rate is around 1.6 percent.

Now for growth

According to Varney, this recession will be out of here by the end of the year with mild growth, no inflation and low interest rates. Expect tax cuts of about 2 to 2 1/2 percent and money supply increases of 10 percent.

Politically the shift of our country will be defense and the restoration of our economy. The events of September 11 have brought us together culturally and this bond will remain strong.

Varney also sees a shift in our media preferences. We are looking to Fox News and the Internet and moving away from the old elite media including the major television stations, the Wall Street Journal and the Washington Post.

Legally there will be some changes too. There is currently a strong dislike by Americans for our legal system. Because it has become such big business, Varney believes that this will lead to tort reform.

Because the pieces are nearly all in place for a sustained recovery, Varney predicts the stock market will record mild gains of six to eight percent, with inflation at about 1 percent. After a year of turmoil, terrorism and uncertainty, that sounds pretty good!
Rep. Stewart has a “voice” in Lansing

by Kathy Blake

State Representative John C. Stewart (R-Plymouth), found his voice in high school and sang his way to Europe with the high school and college glee clubs. He still performs regularly as a soloist and with the Legislator’s Quartet and the Men’s Glee Club of his church. The Legislator’s Quartet will be singing the National Anthem at the Tigers’ game at Comerica Park on May 14.

Not only does Stewart use his voice in song, but also in defense of and knows the difficulties they face. Recently he received a recommendation for Legislator of the Year from the Small Business Association of Michigan, (SBAM).

“Small businesses are the heartbeat of the economy and I want to preserve that,” Stewart said.

In the legislature, he plans to work on improvements for the Single Business Tax, unemployment compensation taxes, workers’ compensation taxes and personal property taxes.

“I look at issues before me as a self-employed attorney who lived off straight commission,” he said.

Stewart serves on the Appropriations committee and the subcommittees on Higher Education, Transportation, Corrections and he is Vice-Chair of the Judiciary Subcommittee. “As a freshman representative, I was very fortunate to be assigned to Appropriations,” said Stewart.

He is a Republican representing the 20th district which includes the communities of Plymouth, Northville and Livonia in western Wayne County.

Stewart describes his district as being moderately conservative and very densely populated. “Wayne county has more people than 17 states,” he says. Yet, Detroit is in the top 6th or 7th place for worst roads nationally. “We’re the gateway to Wayne county. M-14, 1-275 and 1-96 all intersect in my district,” says Stewart.

People in his district are very active in community, church and school activities, he says. Two of the largest churches in Michigan are in his district: Temple Baptist and Our Lady of Good Counsel.

Several high-profile politicians live in Stewart considers himself to be an old-fashioned Republican. He admired his father, Robert, who passed away last year, at the age of 92. “My father taught me the value of self-employment and straight commission,” says the Representative. His father, a member of Kiwanis, was honored last year for 65 years of service.

Rep. Stewart has practiced law as a general private practice lawyer for 25 years in Wayne County. He’s a member of the Plymouth Chamber of Commerce, the Plymouth Colonial Kiwanis Club and is an elder at the First Presbyterian Church of Plymouth. He was a Plymouth Township trustee from 1988-1992.

The representative and his wife, Beth, are very involved in their community and schools. “We are Mr. and Mrs. Community,” he says. They restored an old bungalow house in downtown Plymouth, which holds his office and three other attorney’s offices. His wife is the director for the Plymouth Historical Museum which is in a 26,000 sq. ft. building downtown. They take 6,000 students through it each year and according to Stewart, it has the largest Abraham Lincoln collection of memorabilia in Michigan, says Stewart.

Stewart received his bachelor’s degree from Eastern Michigan University, his master’s at Wayne State University and his law degree at DCL/Michigan State University. He grew up in Wyandotte, and graduated from high school in 1967. His family was very involved with the campaigns of former Governors Romney and Milliken. Both of his sisters are retired teachers of the Trenton School District.

He and his wife have two daughters, who are entering adulthood. He and his wife enjoy a dinner out weekly at one of the multitude of small restaurants in downtown Plymouth. The representative enjoys running and ran in the Detroit International Marathon twice in the mid ‘90s. He still jogs three miles, three times a week.

To reach Representative Stewart, call him at (517) 373-3816, email: johnstewart@house.state.mi.us, or write State Representative John Stewart, P.O. Box 30014, Lansing, MI 48909-7514.

"If these ideas (presented during the 2002 NACS Leadership Assembly) are so powerful, why aren't more companies using them? And if leaders are so smart, why are people's jobs so hard?" asked William Taylor, founding editor of Fast Company magazine, during his closing presentation on the final day of the Leadership Assembly. His answer: "It's hard stuff."

Actually, it's never been harder for companies to do business, said Taylor, citing three fundamental transformations: Customers are more demanding, employees expect more, and the business environment is rapidly changing.

Taylor said that it's never been a better time to be a customer, and it's never been a worse time to serve them. "We live in an era in which no matter how much we want to delight customers, they want more," he said. The reason for higher customer expectations - and their demands - is simple: "There is so much stuff out there."

In retail, people can get what they need in a number of different, competing channels, he said. "With so much stuff out there, being average is an outstanding way to go out of business."

Just as customer demands have increased, so have the demands of employees. The number-one factor in employees' job productivity is their relationship with their immediate supervisors. This means that a business' most vital resource should be its middle managers that oversee these employees. However, most businesses give these managers very few tools to guide their employees' productivity. "Before you win big in the product area, you need to win big in the talent area," Taylor said.

The business environment itself has also undergone a transformation, and is changing fast, said Taylor. The Internet provided a whole new set of ways to conduct business. "The Internet, at its heart, isn't about commerce - it's about connections," said Taylor. "Look at its three killer apps - e-mail, instant messaging, and Napster. They all have one thing in common: they allowed people to express themselves and share their passions," he said. "We thought the Internet was a new industry, but it was just a prolific lab for experimentation."

With all of these transformations, Taylor had three "takeaways" he offered on leadership:

Keep people focused on the future, not the past.

People are pathological learners. "We learn the most from those who are least like us. Unfortunately, most of us spend our time around people most like us."

Great leaders manage to exude genuine self-confidence, but also true humility. "The job description today is not to be the smartest person in the room, but the one smart person will come to."

Taylor urged attendees to "begin with a different idea." He said that in Fast Company's case, it did not consider itself to be in the magazine business, but instead in the teaching business. In addition, he said, it is not good enough to just do things a little better than your competition. In fact, you shouldn't even measure yourself against the competition. Unfortunately, "in most companies, strategy is mimicry," he said. Instead, at truly successful companies, there is one unique idea that defines the company, whether Dell or Southwest Airlines. "It's very easy to describe: it's very difficult to do it," Taylor said.

Next year's Leadership Assembly will take place Feb. 23-26, 2003, in Naples, Fla. There are other upcoming learning opportunities for the industry's mid-level managers - the people whom Taylor identified as critical to a business' success. The NACS Executive Program at Cornell University (July 28-Aug. 2 in Ithaca, N.Y.) is designed to give rising executives the skills, knowledge and inspiration to be positioned for the industry's next generation of leaders. The NACS Leadership Challenge also provides industry retailers with new skills to meet tomorrow's business challenges. Lapeer store allows couple to "retire" into working for themselves

By Karen Braschayko

Friendly greetings, personal service, community connectedness, and hands-on ownership have made a hit of the compact party store just east of Lapeer's historic downtown. In their seventh year as owners of the East Annrook Party Store, Marc and Jennifer Anderson are content with their continuing growth and success. From 150 beverage choices to shampoo and microwave meals, East Annrook Party Store has been refined to offer an array of items in efficient space and accommodate customer requests. Boasting "the coldest drinks in town—and the electric bills to prove it," says Jennifer Anderson, the store's selection and size have expanded to serve as a convenience store for the surrounding neighborhoods.

Marc Anderson worked in downtown Lapeer's Oliver Credit Corporation for seventeen years. When it was bought out by a national company, he and the party store came up for sale. Marc saw the opportunity for he and Jennifer to retire from their jobs and start their own business in 1996. Jennifer owned a tanning salon first before joining Marc at the party store and was also trained as a social worker. "They needed my brain," she said with a laugh. Neither had run a convenience store before, but their dedication and involvement every day of the week has made the store a success.

"It's a money-making little party store," Marc Anderson said. "It's small, but it works." His next challenge is to figure out where to display the liquor they will be selling as soon as the license comes through. Marc calls himself "the cleaning boy and the stock boy," deconstructing and washing out a cooler on my visit.

Jennifer welcomed the opportunity to use her skills as a social worker without the complications. "I still do it here—if somebody has a problem I'll listen and try to help them out...but I don't have to do the paperwork." And she likes how much faster the day goes by, especially during the summer when kids come in for pop and treats. A popular park is located right across the street.

East Annrook Party Store is now a promising family business that will be passed down "as long as they want it," Jennifer joked. Marc's daughter Erin Carmack manages the store. The Andersons have seven children between them, and each has been involved with the store from running for groceries to remodeling.

Like most small town buildings, the one housing East Annrook Party Store and a neighboring nail salon has a history that older residents remember. It housed a Texaco station as Marc was growing up, and then a smaller party store until the Andersons took over. The former storage room, once a garage, was opened up to create room for more coolers and a wider range of convenience foods and products, such as bread, canned goods, medications, and coffee. Very little is kept in storage, so items are fresh. Lottery sales are a big part of the business.

and they'd sold $3,200 the week I visited. "We have our daily regular lottery people, some with the same numbers over and over and over. But we have a lot of winners."

East Annrook Party store is known around Lapeer and beyond for its strict ID policy. (AFD's Dan Reeves conducted TIPS training for the store.) The policy makes sales faster, customers happy, and the Andersons happy. "We know a good 70% of our customers," Jennifer said. And by know them, the Andersons mean they've checked the ID so many times they've memorized it. "We know a good 70% of customers," Jennifer said, and after seeing her and Marc greet by name nearly every customer who came in, and ask about their families and weekend plans, I had no doubt.

Marc grew up in Lapeer and has watched its rapid growth, especially in recent years. The couple lives thirty miles away in Mayville, which is "nice and quiet, like Lapeer used to be." Their home is on a private lake, and their new profession gives them the flexibility and time to "spend a good many hours just floating around." They adore their five grandchildren and take frequent trips to visit. Marc bowls and plays pool.

The Andersons appreciate that they have more time to enjoy family and friends now. Satisfied with their choice to abandon secure jobs, "The Best Little Party Store in Lapeer" has given the Andersons the chance to "retire" into working for themselves, enjoying time with family and friends as part of their new career. "What's most important is we work for ourselves," said Marc.

employees when working at night. They recognize and chat with nearly every customer, and the local police regularly patrol Nepessing Street, looking inside to make sure all is well. They encourage friendliness in their employees, and it has made friends of many patrons. Many employees have been with them for years.

East Annrook Party Store works to support the community even further. The Andersons are part of the Lapeer Area Chamber of Commerce, and Marc is a member of the Lapeer Optimist Club. The Optimists run the famed beertent at the Lapeer Days festival held downtown in August, which has raised much money for playground equipment in the many Lapeer parks. In the store they play the local radio station, broadcasting from just four blocks away.

Cars line up outside the compact East Annrook Party Store.

Small, yet efficient.

U.S. seeks new restrictions on cigarette sales, marketing

The Justice Department is seeking a number of new restrictions on the sale and marketing of cigarettes, including elimination of slotting fees paid to retailers, an end to trade promotions and giveaways, and new "graphic health warnings" on packs, the Wall Street Journal reported.

"NACS is committed to growing and defending this core category," said Lyle Beckwith, NACS' senior vice president for government relations. "Because of the importance this case has to retailers of tobacco products, NACS has followed it closely since its inception in 1999.

NACS is investigating the affects that this settlement might have on the convenience store industry's ability to market tobacco products to adult consumers, and will take appropriate actions to defend our industry's rights."

The proposal is part of a recent exchange of documents between the Justice Department and major cigarette manufacturers engaged in the government's three-year lawsuit against the tobacco industry. The suit alleges fraud, racketeering, and conspiracy by the companies to conceal the health risks of tobacco.

The lawsuit was launched under the Clinton administration, but Attorney General John Ashcroft last year called for settlement talks in the case. In the new settlement documents, the Wall Street Journal said, the Justice Department wants to require that the tobacco industry:

- Eliminate slotting fees paid to retailers for favorable placement of products
- End trade promotions and giveaways
- Forbid use of "light," "low-tar," and "mild"
- Ban cigarette vending machine sales

The tobacco industry defendants have rejected the lawsuit's allegations and have been fighting the case in court since 1999. A federal judge in 2000 narrowed the government's case, dismissing a number of damage claims while allowing the allegations of fraud and racketeering to proceed. But these latest documents indicate the Justice Department has obtained new evidence to bolster its case, the Journal reported.

A Philip Morris Cos. spokeswoman declined to comment on specific remedies outlined in the Justice Department document, calling the case "a politically motivated suit filed by the Clinton administration" that should be dismissed. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. said the Master Settlement Agreement between the industry and state attorneys general "comprehensively addresses the issue of underage smoking" and added that the company would fight further restrictions.

Vector readies launch of 'Quest' nicotine-free cigarette

Vector Group Ltd. announced that its new, nicotine-free cigarette product will be named Quest and will be available nationwide beginning in the third quarter of 2002. The company also said it would combine the sales and marketing functions of its Liggett Group and Vector Tobacco subsidiaries into a new entity, Liggett Vector Brands Inc.

Quest cigarettes will be sold in Lights and Menthol Lights variants, in both box and soft packs, the company said, and will be supported by a $40-million advertising and marketing campaign.

Quest cigarettes utilize a proprietary process that enables the production of a tobacco cigarette that is nicotine-free and tastes and smokes like a conventional cigarette, Vector said. Because they are nicotine-free, Quest cigarettes also contain a greatly reduced level of the most potent tobacco specific nitrosamine, known as NNK, believed to be one of the leading contributors of lung cancer.

“Jack Welch is an (expletive deleted).... Jack Welch is the greatest CEO GE has ever had.” Both sentences were printed on the first page of Noel Tichy’s book “Control Your Destiny or Someone Else Will.”

“Winners never take the easy way out,” said Tichy during his presentation at the NACS Leadership Assembly. “It’s not cruel, it’s honest,” and it’s something that Welch understood, said Tichy.

Tichy said that great leaders don’t seek to win popularity contests. They also have an “edge” and know that difficult decisions, such as downsizing - are sometimes necessary. While keeping an unproductive employee may seem to be the easy way out, it is cruel and dishonest, said Tichy.

Eliminating unproductive employees early is actually more humane than when they are mid-career and have more family obligations. Tichy reminded attendees that in his early years, Welch was savaged for his downsizing moves and dubbed “Neutron Jack.”

Tichy should know a bit about Welch, whom Fortune magazine named manager of the century. For three years, Tichy directed General Electric’s worldwide development efforts. Tichy is currently director of the Global Leadership Program at the University of Michigan Business School.

This edge that great leaders possess is just one aspect of a great company, said Tichy. Great companies all have leaders that communicate their “teachable point of view” in which values, ideas, and emotional energy are expressed.

And perhaps there was no CEO more committed to teaching than Welch. “You leverage your organization by teaching,” said Tichy. He stressed that this education process is a continuous effort, and must be part of the everyday culture, with leaders never resting on laurels. As Welch had noted. “Yesterday’s press clippings wrap today’s fish.”

“Winning companies have strong values,” said Tichy, adding that these values define desirable behaviors and support the organization’s central goals. And a positive value system encourages great ideas, he said. Enron had values, Tichy noted. “The problem with that company is that they didn’t teach them.”

In terms of “emotional energy,” Tichy said that employees are either an “energy pump or an energy sump.” Leaders, such as Welch, are able to either improve negative performers or transition them to another company. GE, Tichy said, is obsessed with finding and cultivating “A” employees, mentoring “B” employees into “A” employees, and either quickly improving “C” employees or helping them transition to jobs at other companies.

What about the disparaging comment that Tichy wrote in his book about Welch? Actually, it was a compliment. So what did Jack Welch think of these comments? “He loved the book.”

New campaign is warming consumers to frozen foods

The National Frozen and Refrigerated Foods Association has launched a new industry-wide campaign, Bring us to Your Table! Freezer Favorites.

With the endless variety, convenience and nutrition aspects of frozen foods, the industry is changing consumers’ perceptions of frozen food through the new campaign. The initiative is communicating to consumers that the frozen food aisle offers everything from complete meal solutions, to complimentary side dishes, to snacks and meals in a hurry.

The Bring us to Your Table! Freezer Favorites campaign is a year-round effort to show the meal solution aspects of frozen foods across all categories and brands. The slogan was chosen for its positive appeal to consumers to view their freezer as the modern-day pantry. Together with mouth-watering food photography, the slogan communicates the quality, good taste and meal solution aspects of frozen foods.

Settlement unlikely in Michigan price gouging case

A pre-trial settlement appears unlikely in a lawsuit involving a three-convenience-store operator in Michigan accused by the state of price gouging, the Midland Daily News reported.

Bobbie Jean Harvey, who owns three stores, was accused by Michigan Attorney General Jennifer Granholm of violating the state's consumer protection laws by raising gasoline prices from 25 to 50 percent in the hours following the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. Harvey is among a handful of Michigan marketers who have rejected Granholm's offer to apologize, refund money, pay fines, and admit wrongdoing.

Harvey's attorney submitted as evidence letters from Harvey's fuel distributor, who sent updates on the morning of Sept. 11 warning customers to expect price changes and to adjust retail prices accordingly. Harvey's supplier could not guarantee price or when shipments would be received.

The warning on available fuel supplies came as customers were lining up to buy gasoline at Harvey's stores, the newspaper said. Her stores raised prices and imposed a $50 limit, but that did not slow the rush. Her stores were forced to close early.

By the next morning, Harvey's supplier rescinded the previous day's warnings, and her stations rescinded the price hikes, the Detroit Free Press said. In the succeeding days, the company refunded overcharges to customers, even returning more money than the company actually took in.

In a pretrial statement, Harvey’s attorney also said that Harvey was not the proper defendant in the case because she was acting as an officer of the corporation, and that the attorney general's office did not acknowledge receipt of certain documents.

Crawford named to FDA post

Dr. Lester M. Crawford Jr., D.V.M., Ph.D., has been appointed to the post of deputy commissioner of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, effective immediately, Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson announced recently. The appointment makes Crawford the senior official at the FDA, pending the appointment of an FDA commissioner.

"Lester Crawford has devoted his career to promoting safer products for the public, and he brings to the FDA valuable experience and leadership skills," Thompson said.

Crawford joins the FDA after spending the last nine years as Director of the Center for Food and Nutrition Policy of Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University in Alexandria, VA. (The Center was previously at Georgetown University from 1993-2001.) He also acted as executive director and interim executive director of the Association of American Veterinary Medical Colleges and was executive vice president of the National Food Processors Association from 1991-1993.

"At a time when food safety and security are at the top of everyone's minds, it is appropriate to have a leader with a strong food safety background in a top FDA position," said FMI President and CEO Tim Hammonds. "Under Dr. Crawford's leadership, the food industry and consumers can expect policies driven by science for the public good."

Lottery debuts first-ever double-sided instant game ticket

For the first time ever, the Michigan Lottery is introducing a two-sided instant game ticket. The $10 “Double Feature” offering a $500,000 top prize, will hit ticket counters statewide on May 9, 2002. The front of the ticket features three scratch games, while the back of the ticket features three pull-tab games. With 15 different ways to win, and great overall odds of 1 in 2.85, customers will be flocking to your stores to purchase this new ticket. I encourage you to prominently display your point-of-sale materials for “Double Feature.”

Free instant ticket coupon. In February, Lottery players throughout the state redeemed special promotional Lottery coupons that offered one free $2 instant game ticket with the purchase of any $5 instant game. Those coupons were distributed via select home-delivered newspapers and they were a huge hit with your customers!

Due to the huge success of the first instant ticket coupon promotion, the Lottery has chosen to distribute another “Buy a $5 Instant Ticket, Get a $2 Instant Ticket Free” coupon on April 7, 2002 in more than 1.6 million home-delivered newspapers across the state.

The redemption method on the new coupons is exactly the same as it was for the first coupon. When a customer comes into your store, makes a $5 instant game purchase and presents a valid coupon, all you need to do is give them the $2 instant game ticket of their choice. Simply scan the barcode on the coupon at the time of purchase, then enter the underlined five-digit number from the coupon through your terminal. You do not need to turn the coupons in to the Lottery. Instead, handle the coupons as you would a validated instant game ticket. You will receive a 2 percent cashing commission on each coupon you take in!

AFD Food & Beverage Report, April 2002
Michigan food regulations seminars held for food stores and food service operations

Seminars will be conducted at various locations in Michigan by Food Service Associates, a nationwide leader in food safety education. Their trainers have extensive hands-on experience in actual food operations. The seminars will cover food laws.

The Michigan Food Law of 2000 applies to all food and food service establishments, including grocery stores, convenience stores, restaurants, institutional food operations and caterers. This law contains the rules and regulations for both food service operations and stores of all types that are involved in the preparation and service of food. It also addresses the inspection procedures utilized by health departments and the Michigan Department of Agriculture.

These seminars are designed to assure that key personnel of all food establishments and food service operations are fully aware of the requirements of this law. This seminar is not the Michigan Food Manager Certification Program. Using the HACCP self-inspection procedures presented in this seminar will help to assure that your establishment complies with all of the standards of Michigan’s Food Law.

With clients in all 50 states, they have trained over 50,000 food professionals in food safety management, through their own professional development programs and on behalf of hundreds of state, district, county and city health departments.

All who attend will be awarded a certificate of training. No test is required for this certificate.

All owners, managers and other key employees of all food service establishments and food stores that prepare food will benefit from this seminar. They will learn the rules for receiving, storing, refrigerating, preparing, handling, cooking, cooling, reheating and serving food; the standards for health and hygiene of personnel; and the regulations for cleaning and sanitizing equipment.

Participants who pass the option free examination will receive a special upgraded certificate.

Under the food law, “a person in charge” must be present at all times when the establishment is open and/or working with food.

“Persons in charge” must be able to demonstrate knowledge of food safety and the requirements of the Michigan Food Law. Taking the free optional, end-of-course exam and earning this special certificate is an excellent way to show that you have this required knowledge.

For registration information, call 1-800-442-2277.

Seminars will be held at the following locations from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., lunch is not included:

- Livonia - May 6
- Burton Manor
- Lansing - May 7
- Best Western Midway
- Cadillac - May 8
- Best Western Bill Oliver’s
- Kalamazoo - May 9
- Otsego Club
- Flint - May 16
- Ramada Inn & Conference Center

There’s a fungus among us

New meat substitute is fungus grown

A new meat substitute is being introduced in U.S. supermarkets that is made from fungus. Popular in Europe, the meat substitute is protein-rich with minimal calories and high fiber. Called mycoprotein, the meat substitute is made into a variety of products such as chicken nuggets, ground beef and lasagna. It is marketed under the trade name, Quorn.

The fungus was discovered growing on farms near London and is now grown through fermentation and then mixed with egg and flavorings and shaped into meat.
Tomato products may ward off prostate cancer

A new study shows men who consume tomato products two or more times a week may reduce their chances of developing prostate cancer. Tomatoes contain lycopene, an antioxidant thought to protect against cancer by absorbing oxygen-free radicals.

Eating cooked tomatoes was particularly beneficial, according to the study, which showed that regularly eating tomato sauce, ketchup and other tomato-based foods lowered the prostate cancer risk by as much as 36 percent.

Dr. Edward Giovannucci of Brigham and Women’s Hospital and the Harvard School of Public Health, the first author of the study, said it supported earlier research involving foods such as tomatoes that were high in lycopene, a powerful antioxidant.

“These most recent findings add support to the notion that a diet rich in tomatoes and lycopene-containing foods, as well as other fruits and vegetables, may reduce the risk of prostate cancer,” Giovannucci said.

A report on the study appeared in the Journal of the National Cancer Institute.

Researchers analyzed the food choices and prostate cancer histories of more than 47,000 men and found that those who ate at least two meals a week containing tomato products lowered their risk of prostate cancer by 24 percent to 36 percent.

Giovannucci said that lycopene is thought to protect against cancer by absorbing oxygen-free radicals, which are chemicals created during the genetic structure of cells.

Lettuce shortage could drive up prices

California’s worst lettuce shortage in 15 years could affect the U.S., according to state agricultural specialists. More than 50% of the country’s lettuce comes from California. Farmers attribute the shortage to unusually cold weather, which stunted the growth of crops.

Affluent Consumers still buy luxury goods

Six months after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, high-income American consumers have changed their shopping rationale, but not their habits, a survey finds. More consumers say they buy luxury items in a quest for well-being instead of status. The survey says quality and value are more important to affluent consumers than brand names.

Snapple brings five new flavors to the mix

Snapple has five new varieties coming to market. New additions to the Snapple line include: Snapple Apple, Snapspricot Orange,Very Cherry tea, Lime green tea and Diet Lime Green Tea.

Snapple Apple is a new twist on the first drink that Snapple introduced.

Snapspricot Orange is a blend that combines the flavor of sweet oranges and plump apricots for a juiced-up taste.

Very Cherry Tea is a blend of cherries with real brewed tea.

Snapple added tangy lime to green tea in Lime Green Tea, (green tea accounts for 26% of the premium iced tea category), and Diet Lime Green Tea.

Each bottle will be “bonnetted” with color-coded checkerboard caps so consumers can identify their favorite flavors in no time: Snapple Iced Teas wear yellow checkerboard caps, Diet Snapple beverages don white checkerboard caps and Snapple juice drinks are topped with blue checkerboard caps.

In addition, the word “new” will be printed on the tamperbands of each new flavor, so consumers can identify the five new Snapple flavors at first glance.

The Snapple Beverage Group, a unit of Cadbury Schweppes, plc (NYSE:CSG), has a beverage brand portfolio that includes Snapple, Mistic, Orangina, Stewart’s and Yoo-hoo.

Central Alarm Signal, Inc. to deploy new secured digital wireless alarm monitoring

Central Alarm Signal, Inc. has reached an agreement with AES-IntelliNet to deploy a secure wireless communication network, owned and maintained by Central Alarm Signal, Inc.

The system links your alarm system directly to the central monitoring facility without wires or telephone lines. Telephone lines are widely used to link alarm systems to the central station—and the criminals know it. Burglars now routinely cut the telephone lines to homes, businesses—even whole neighborhoods—before breaking in.

Plus, the telephone system itself is susceptible to problems caused by weather, accidents, equipment failures and natural disasters. Any of these problems could prevent your important alarm messages from reaching the central station, police and fire response personnel.

Advantages of the AES-IntelliNet Network

AES-IntelliNet provides a fast, direct link between your alarm and the central station. Your alarm signals reach the central station in two seconds or less on average. Compare that with 30-60 seconds for most telephone and cellular technologies.

The secure status of the wireless connection is checked continually over the active network. It’s a full 2-way, digital secure communication network. Every alarm message is confirmed and acknowledged, 2-way networks are far more reliable than 1-way systems, which cannot confirm that the message was received.

AES-IntelliNet uses exclusive “smart” routing technology to ensure that your alarm message gets through by the fastest path available. Your critical alarm messages have many paths to reach the central station. In contrast, a telephone line provides only a single path. If that single path fails for any reason, the link fails.

Central Alarm Signal, Inc. has been providing highly specialized security services to the Greater Metropolitan Detroit area since 1969. These services include burglary, fire, CCTV, access control, central station monitoring and True 24-hour service for its customers. Visit Central Alarm Signal at www.99panic.com or call toll free—1-800-99-PANIC for more information.

President Bush signs economic stimulus legislation

Capping a five-month process with a three-day flurry of action, President George W. Bush signed a scaled-down economic stimulus package into law, March 9.

FMI President and CEO Tim Hammonds attended the Rose Garden bill signing ceremony, attended by the president and First Lady, Vice President Dick Cheney, key cabinet members and House and Senate leaders from both parties. Tom Potter, a deli department manager with a Giant Food store in Reston, VA, stood on the dais with the President and other workers.

March 7, the House overwhelmingly passed the Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002 (H.R. 3090) by a vote of 417-3. The Senate followed suit March 8, passing the measure by a vote of 85-9.

FMI applauds the bipartisan effort in the House and Senate to include a two-year, retroactive extension of the Welfare-to-Work and Work Opportunity Tax Credit programs, which expired on Dec. 31, 2001.

Political and budgetary pressures resulted in a scaled-down version of economic stimulus legislation, compared to the three previous bills approved by the House. However, this is a drastic improvement over bills containing only unemployment benefits without any business tax relief that twice passed the Senate. The final bill contains many provisions important and favorable to the supermarket industry.

FMI applauds the bipartisan effort in the House and Senate to include a two-year, retroactive extension of the Welfare-to-Work and Work Opportunity Tax Credit programs, which expired on Dec. 31, 2001.

Political and budgetary pressures resulted in a scaled-down version of economic stimulus legislation, compared to the three previous bills approved by the House. However, this is a drastic improvement over bills containing only unemployment benefits without any business tax relief that twice passed the Senate. The final bill contains many provisions important and favorable to the supermarket industry.

H.R. 3090 contains the following provisions:

- A 30 percent "bonus" depreciation provision allowing businesses to write off 30 percent more in depreciation of capital investments in the next three years. That is, 30 percent of adjusted basis may be expensed in the year the asset is placed in service provided the property has a recovery period of 20 years or less. Businesses owning passenger automobiles (with gross weight less than 6,000 pounds) will be able to depreciate them faster; an additional $4,600 may be deducted in the first year of the automobile's use.

- Extends the Net Operating Loss carryback period from two to five years and waives the Alternative Minimum Tax depreciation for this allowance. For tax years 2001 and 2002, businesses will be able to apply for tax refunds as far back as five years, when they have failed to make a profit (previously limited to two years).

- Provides a 13-week extension of unemployment benefits (from regular 26 weeks in most states) for workers who exhaust their regular benefits and who live in a state with an unemployment rate of at least 4 percent.

- Significant unemployment payroll tax relief in the form of an $8 billion transfer of Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA) revenue to state UI trust accounts, and does NOT include objectionable expansions of UI eligibility and increases in weekly benefit amounts. The extended benefits are payable to workers who filed an initial claim for UI benefits after March 15, 2001, and exhausted their regular state UI benefits (with 20 weeks of work or equivalent wages prior to separation).

- Provides tax benefits for the reconstruction of New York City, including wage credits, similar to the Work Opportunity Tax Credit, for those with less than 200 employees, within the New York Liberty Zone.

28.....AFD Food & Beverage Report. April 2002
People in certain jobs are known to face a higher risk of workplace homicide, but certain safety measures—such as ensuring that employees don’t work alone at night—appear to cut this risk, a new study shows, says Reuters. And a combination of measures works best, it concludes.

Researchers found that businesses that eliminated “solo work” at night, or took other safety precautions such as providing bright exterior lights, substantially lowered the odds that an employee would be killed on the job.

Yet other widely used crime deterrents, such as video surveillance cameras and posted signs stating the business has limited cash on hand, did not make a dent in robbery-related homicides alone, according to findings published in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Overall, “administrative measures”—business policies on factors such as the number of employees on duty and how often bank deposits are made—appeared to offer the most worker protection, the study’s lead author, Dr. Dana Loomis of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, told Reuters.

Loomis and colleagues looked at 105 North Carolina workplaces where an employee had been killed between 1994 and 1998. They compared these workplaces with a random sample of similar businesses in the state.

According to Loomis, a small majority of the homicides occurred in industries traditionally considered “high-risk,” such as convenience stores, restaurants, gasoline stations and taxi cab services; however, the researcher added, homicides occurred in a wide range of business types, “from manufacturing to real estate management.” And 40 percent of the homicides, the investigators found, were not robbery-related, but instead involved disputes between workers or with managers or clients. Some disputes involved a worker’s domestic partner or family member.

With these types of homicides, traditional robbery deterrents were largely ineffective, the report indicates; however, a few safety measures—for example, having locked doors, bright lighting and alarms—did appear to offer some protection, the authors note.

While only a few safety measures had a significant impact by themselves, the researchers found that businesses with several tactics in place emerged as having the lowest homicide risk. Workplaces with five or more measures in place were 50 percent to 90 percent less likely to see an employee homicide.

What to do if you lose your purse or wallet

We’ve all heard horror stories about fraud that’s committed in your name, address, SS#, credit, etc. A thief can wreak havoc on your life using the contents of your purse or wallet.

Here’s some critical information to limit the damage in case this happens to you or someone you know. As everyone always advises, cancel your credit cards immediately, but the key is having the toll free numbers and your card numbers handy so you know whom to call.

Keep those numbers where you can find them easily. File a police report immediately in the jurisdiction where it was stolen, this proves to credit providers you were diligent, and is a first step toward an investigation (if there ever is one).

But here’s what is perhaps most important—Call the three national credit reporting organizations immediately to place a fraud alert on your name and SS#. The alert means any company that checks your credit knows your information was stolen and they have to contact you by phone to authorize new credit.

The numbers are:
Equifax: 1-800-525-6285
Experian (formerly TRW): 1-888-397-3742
Trans Union: 1-800-680-7289
Social Security Administration (fraud line): 1-800-269-0271
Five essential elements of a team

Again and again, it’s been proven that teams outperform individuals. But you can’t just throw people together and call them a team. It’s the right kind of team that outperforms individuals.

Five elements characterize successful teams:

1. Small size. The more people on a team, the more difficult it is to interact and make decisions. The most successful teams have fewer than 10. Keep this in mind when you assemble a team.

2. Complementary skills. Managers sometimes pick people based on personal chemistry or rank. Don’t make this mistake. You need a variety of skills, talents and abilities. Three “skill sets” are required: technical, problem-solving and decision-making, and interpersonal skills. Fill all three when you assemble a team.

3. Common purpose and performance goals. There must be a long-term goal. Every intermediate goal must correlate with the major goal. Caution: Don’t get involved defining the team’s mini-goals. Teams work best when they’re given a broad mandate by management and then do the job on their own.

4. A common approach. No team heads out of the starting gate with every member working together smoothly. Give the team ample time to discover the best way for everyone to work together. Soon enough people will be assigning themselves specific tasks, setting and sticking to schedules, finding ways to make decisions and revising them later if necessary.

5. Mutual accountability. When a group of people holds itself collectively accountable, it’s a team.

Finally, employees may be concerned that a good team’s superior performance threatens individual accomplishment. It doesn’t. The best teams take advantage of every member’s unique skills and expertise — which is why working with a good team is an opportunity for the best people to distinguish themselves and achieve more than they could have alone. — Today’s Wholesaler

Beverage Associations finalize merger plans

At a joint meeting of the boards of directors of the National Association of Beverage Retailers (NABR) and the National Licensed Beverage Association (NLBA), both organizations finalized plans for their forthcoming merger, to take place July 1.

The merged association, to be named American Beverage Licensees (ABL), voted to select Berman and Co. as its government affairs firm and to name the joint political action committee as the American Beverage Licensees Political Action Committee (ABLPAC).

The NLBA represents licensed beverage retailers, including more than 14,000 bars, restaurants, taverns, and liquor stores nationwide. The NABR represents off-premise licensees in the “open” or “license” states and on-premise proprietors in markets across the nation.

ABL said it will represent its membership before Congress and any federal agencies affecting the organization, its affiliates, and members of the licensed beverage industry. The organization will have its headquarters in the Washington, DC area.

Minute Maid Plans To Fortify Orange Juice With Vitamin D

Coca-Cola-owned Minute Maid has announced plans to add Vitamin D to calcium-fortified fruit juices starting in April. Vitamin D, which aids in the absorption of calcium, will be added to their Premium Home-Squeezed Style orange juice and Premium Blends products, the company said. Minute Maid Vitamin D and calcium-fortified juices will set a new nutritional standard in the $3.1 billion chilled orange juice category, and will play a strong role in continuing the growth momentum for Minute Maid branded products during the coming year.

The state of health care coverage for small business

Where are we and how did we get here?

By Chris Hall
Coalition for Health Insurance Market Reform

More and more small businesses across Michigan can’t afford to pay the high cost of insuring their employees. They are running out of options, and unless there is reform in the small group insurance market, many of these small businesses may be forced to go out of business. Sound grim? It is. And it’s getting worse.

In the beginning

In 1980, the state legislature crafted Public Act 350. The measure set guidelines for Blue Cross Blue Shield of Michigan (BCBSM) to be, among other things, the “insurer of last resort.” The Blues have proudly filled this role, as it has become the insurer of millions of Michigan citizens during the past 22 years. It has also put BCBSM at a competitive disadvantage with commercial insurers in the small group market. That’s because the commercial carriers can accept younger, healthier workers while choosing to not insure older, less healthy employees. The Blues, as the insurer of last resort, must insure this group, and it costs them a whole lot more to do so. Which means it costs the small business owners more too.

No winners on an uneven playing field

This “cherry picking” by the commercial carriers has created an uneven playing field that is hurting small business and the families they insure. Take this one example: A small business looking for the most affordable plan chose to enroll a healthy, 23 year old employee with a commercial carrier. It enrolled a 64 year old female employee with diabetes in the company Blues plan. The business was willing to pay a little more to insure the older employee to get a break on the rate for the younger one. Looked like a good idea at the time. Then the young employee was diagnosed with terminal liver cancer and filed a claim. The commercial carrier responded with a rate increase of $10,000 a year...every month...until the business was paying more than $80,000 a year to insure a handful of employees. There are thousands of businesses that have lived this kind of horror story...and it’s why a new legislation needs to be written that addresses the inequities in the small group market that impact small business and the Blues.

Fixing the problem

There is a solution. It’s an insurance model proposed by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC). Forty-seven other states have adopted it. Michigan should too. The NAIC model limits rate increases, not only by the Blues, but for commercial carriers, too. Essentially it evens the playing field and eliminates “cherry picking.”

Coalition forms

The Coalition for Health Insurance Market Reform (CHIMR) was created to help enact these much-needed reforms. One hundred and forty sponsoring organizations have now come together to speak in one voice to change the way insurance companies operate in Michigan. CHIMR members are working with BCBSM to enact the NAIC model.

There is a lot at stake

And the governor’s office and legislature indicate they are willing to fix the problem.

We want to hear from you

Your story, your testimony can be key to making reform a reality. This is your chance to make a difference. For your business. For your family. For your employees. For Michigan.

Stand up and be heard. Lansing is listening. To contact CHIMR call (517) 485-2195.

Vendor overcharging

"Overcharging" occurs when a vendor charges WIC participants more for supplemental food than non-WIC customers, or charges WIC participants more than the current shelf price (the price marked on the item, shelf, or sign).

WIC vendors must also give WIC participants the sale price of a food or they will be considered to be "overcharging." "Overcharging" is a serious violation of the WIC program. Three or more incidents of "overcharging" the WIC program by a vendor carries a mandatory sanction consisting of termination of the WIC Vendor Contract and a three-year disqualification from the WIC program. This mandatory sanction is required by USDA regulations and is found in the most current WIC Vendor Sanction Policy. The vendor may also be disqualified from the Food Stamp Program.

Warning letters will not be sent to vendors prior to taking sanction actions for overcharging or other mandatory sanctions.

WIC Program

WIC Program Federal Regulations require that state agencies establish procedures to ensure that the public has an opportunity to provide comment on the development of the WIC Program State Plan of Operations.

The Michigan Department of Community Health will accept written comments regarding the operation of the WIC Program in Michigan between March 1, 2002 and April 30, 2002. Comments may be related to any aspect of the operation of the WIC Program in Michigan. These comments will assist the Department to constructively review WIC operations and make improvements in the operation of the WIC Program in Michigan. Comments should be mailed to: WIC Division, Michigan Department of Community Health, P.O. Box 30195, Lansing, MI 48909.

Coupon processing delays

WIC has encountered WIC vendor payment delays caused by problems with the quality of coupon paper. This unfortunately causes every coupon price to be entered into the automation equipment twice. This delay means vendor payments will take up to six weeks to process after the coupons are received at WIC.

Change of ownership during processing period

The WIC program policy regarding change of ownership during the application processing period states that for northern vendors, the new owner of a WIC authorized store will not be considered for authorization under the change of ownership policy if the change of ownership occurs between May 31, 2002 and June 30, 2002.

If a change of ownership of a currently authorized vendor in the northern part of the state occurs between 5/31/02 and 6/30/02, the new owner may submit a request for an application for WIC authorization. Upon receipt, the application will be placed on a waiting list for consideration as a new vendor after July 1, 2002. The authorization criteria for new vendors will then be used.

FDI board approves plan for umbrella organization with FMI
Foodservice distributors to form stand-alone association

The Board of Governors of Food Distributors International (FDI) approved a plan for future trade association representation of its membership, which now includes both grocery wholesale companies and foodservice distributors on March 2.

Under this plan, subject to ratification by the full membership, wholesale grocery companies will join an umbrella organization with members of the Food Marketing Institute (FMI), a Washington, DC-based organization representing grocery retailers as well as some of the current grocery wholesale members of FDI. Wholesalers will be encouraged to maintain membership in or join FMI.

FDI will continue all of its activities throughout 2002, including its lobbying efforts on Capitol Hill, its education and research functions, communications services, industry relations activities, and its on-line service, Food FleetXchange. FDI’s Day in Washington and Thomas Jefferson Awards in June, the Midyear Executive Conference in September, and the Productivity Convention and Exposition in Atlanta in October will take place as scheduled.

Foodservice distributors, who are now members of the International Foodservice Distributors Association (IFDA), the foodservice component within FDI, will form a new stand-alone trade association specifically focusing on foodservice issues and concerns.

All of IFDA’s 2002 programs will proceed as scheduled, including its Sales & Marketing Conference in November, its leadership in the Efficient Foodservice Response (EFR) project, and the President’s Conference sponsored in partnership with the International Foodservice Manufacturers Association (IFMA) in November. IFDA will also continue its sponsorship of the Day in Washington and Thomas Jefferson Awards program.

The action came at FDI’s Annual Business Conference in Dallas, TX, and will be effective January 1, 2003, if it is ratified by the membership. That vote will come in a mail ballot within the next few months.

Consideration of these actions has been underway for several months, explained FDI President John R. Block. A number of wholesale grocers have expressed their concern about the need for efficiencies and reduced demand on time and resources, he said.

At the same time, foodservice distributors have felt an increasing need to be able to more sharply focus on their own business issues and alliances, which often are quite different from the wholesale channel, said IFDA President John Gray.

Under the plan, to be submitted to the FMI Board for approval in May, Block will serve as executive vice president at FMI and be in charge of the wholesale component, which will also be represented by a Wholesale Advisory Board and have several new seats on the FMI Board of Directors. An Executive Committee, an Industry Relations Committee, Government Relations Committee, and legal counsel will support the Wholesale Advisory Board.

Gray will serve as president of the new, independent IFDA, which will continue its operations in Falls Church, VA as part of FDI until the new organization is launched.

Labor Department info available via website link

Food Distributors International (FDI) has established a special link on its website (www.fdi.org) with the U.S. Department of Labor to provide easy access information about confusing and frustrating federal labor laws.

The new service connects members to the Department's new "elaws Advisors" (Employment Laws Assistance for workers and small businesses), Web-based educational tools that offer employers and employees access to information about federal employment laws at any time, free of charge. They address common labor issues such as:

- Family and Medical Leave
- Fair Labor Standards
- Occupational Safety and Health
- Small Business Retirement Savings
- Poster Requirements

"With elaws, any person with access to the Internet can find free and accurate information about employment laws affecting them with the simple click of a mouse," U.S. Secretary of Labor Elaine L. Chao said. "The elaws Advisors are a valuable set of tools for America's 21st Century workforce. They have the power to provide instant information to anyone at anytime."

"We are happy to make this information available to FDI member companies," said FDI President and CEO John R. Block. "Labor laws and regulations can be tough enough to deal with and anything we can do to make things easier is a plus."

The elaws Advisors mimic the interaction an individual might have with a DOL representative by asking questions, providing information, and directing the individual to the appropriate resolution. DOL aims to offer a pleasant experience that yields real answers and real results, and plans to continually develop new Advisors to further assist America's employment community.

"Normally it would cost a business owner lost hours and countless phone calls to find the answers to employment questions," Block said. "With elaws, that can all change."

The elaws Advisors are part of the Compliance Assistance Initiative set forth by the Department of Labor to help America's 21st century workforce and its employees better understand their rights and responsibilities in the workplace.

Consumers not as bubbly about soft drinks

Soft drinks continue to lose their fizz among consumers as bottled water and other noncarbonated drinks gain popularity.

Growth in the U.S. carbonated soft drink industry was relatively flat during 2001, and per-capita consumption of the bubbly beverages fell for the third year in a row, according to reports by market research firms.

Traditional cola drinks continue to dominate the soft drink aisle, but shelf space is under assault by noncarbonated beverages, including the fast-growing bottled water sector. Market leader Coca-Cola Co.'s soft drink volume fell by 0.2% during 2001, while archrival PepsiCo Inc. earned a 1.3% volume increase, according to Beverage Digest, a Bedford Hills, N.Y.-based newsletter. By contrast, Red Bull, an energy drink popular with younger people, registered a 118.8% increase in volume.

Although Pepsi's existing diet drinks registered gains, the company drove additional sales with its new Mountain Dew Code Red and Pepsi Twist beverages, according to Gary A. Hemphill, vice president of Beverage Marketing Corp., a New York-based research firm. Though best known for their carbonated brands, the nation's two leading beverage companies got a huge boost from noncarbonated beverages. Pepsi's noncarbonated sales, including juices and the fast-growing water sector, grew by 35%, while Coke's noncarbonated sales rose by 23%, according to Beverage Marketing Corp.

Water brands provided most of that lift. "Not to use a bad pun, but water clearly is draining volume from some of the other carbonated categories," said John Sicher, editor and publisher of Beverage Digest. "The carbonated soft drink market grew by 0.6% in 2001, but we estimate growth in bottled water at 30%.

The flagship cola brands—Coke Classic and Pepsi—still account for a third of all carbonated drink sales. Add the diet equivalents, and colas contribute half of the industry's sales. But cola companies are scrambling to get a piece of the noncarbonated market. PepsiCo, for example, markets the Aquafina brand, while Coca-Cola sells Dasani bottled water.

Water, the trendy Mountain Dew Code Red and a growing number of juice and energy drinks are the beverage industry's response to the increasingly diverse tastes of Americans.

During the early 1990s, the carbonated beverage industry enjoyed year-to-year growth in the 2% to 3% range. In recent years, however, the cola companies have been broadening their offerings to generate sales growth.

Walgreen and CVS competition heats up

Walgreen, the Number One U.S. drugstore chain in terms of sales, has plans to add 475 stores by Aug. 31 and another 2,000 this decade, as it goes head-to-head with CVS Corp. in a number of key markets, Dow Jones reported.

CVS Corp., with just over 4,000, is gearing up for increased competition by aggressively recruiting new pharmacists—pay packages start at $75,000, with stock option plans. CVS hired nearly 1,100 pharmacists in the second half of 2001 and its pharmacies are now fully staffed, the company said. The company has plans to add stores in high-growth markets such as Las Vegas, Chicago, Dallas, and Orlando, Florida. CVS also plans to close or merge underperforming stores.

Long-term prospects for the drugstore's chains are good, Dow Jones said, as the aging U.S. population will demand more prescriptions and as pharmaceutical companies create new products. Analysts say the chain drugstores business is highly volatile right now, after several years of rapid growth for big companies buying out independent stores and smaller chains.

Walgreen, with about 3,600 stores, said it is on track to have more than 6,000 by 2010. Rite Aid Corp., the number three U.S. chain, has 3,500 stores but is struggling to maintain its market position as it works through cash flow concerns, Dow Jones said.

FMI calls for streamline of food definition

by Tim Hammonds
FMI President and CEO

The Food Marketing Institute (FMI) applauds the Streamlined Sales Tax Project (SSTP), the National Council of State Legislators (NCSL) Task Force, and now, the Streamlined Sales Tax Implementing States (SSTIS), in their goal of simplifying the current sales tax system.

The SSTP created a definition of food that contained among others, subsets of soft drinks, candy and confections, and prepared foods. Instead, FMI has urged the adoption of the federal food stamp definition because it is an inherently simple definition that has been used by the retail industry for over thirty years to deliver benefits to those in need.

When a retailer receives authorization into the food stamp program by the USDA field office, the retailer is presented with a list of eligible and ineligible food items. And, because this is a federal program, all authorized food items are federally defined, and already universal across state lines.

While historically FMI has preferred the food stamp definition, it is recognized that some members of Congress may object to the definition because of the negative revenue implications for states that currently tax certain food groups.

If the food stamp definition cannot be accepted, FMI believes the current SSTP food subcategories are not a viable alternative, because they in themselves are confusing. For instance, the candy definition states that, "candy shall not include any preparation containing flour." This creates potential confusion to both retailer and consumer because there are some candy products that do contain flour. For example, a Kit-Kat bar contains flour, yet a Snickers bar does not.

Arbitrary definitions add to that confusion. The SSTP’s prepared foods definition is an example of this. It defines a prepared food as one where "two or more ingredients are mixed or combined by the seller (emphasis added) to make a single item."

This drastically affects retailers that make and sell their own signature products. It further unfairly levies a tax on certain products when the same product in the store could be untaxed if it is made by a different company. (Why is a loaf of bread prepared at the store level taxed while a loaf of bread prepared in the factory is not?) This confuses retailers and it confuses consumers. A complicated assortment of varying tax rates and exemptions creates a huge potential for innocent mistakes, delays at the checkout, customer dissatisfaction and thus, uneven compliance. It’s also very important to understand that many smaller grocers do not have front-end scanning systems. In addition, a new set of definitions inconsistent with any currently existing in the industry would force retailers into an expensive and time-consuming project to identify the ingredients of each product that might fall into a subcategory and to reprogram their front end systems to accommodate the proper tax status of those products.

This would inevitably lead to enforcement actions and fines for inadvertent technical violations of the new definitions. Working with the states to preserve their current definitions of taxable food would minimize these burdens.

FMI urges Congress to continue efforts to simplify the subcategory definitions by working closely with all interested parties, including food retailers, which will be affected by them. As changes are considered, legislators must be sure that alternatives to the current system truly deliver a less complex and more equitable system.
Specialty foods survey released at NGA convention identifies opportunities for independent retailers

Survey identifies how retailers can use specialty foods to meet their customers' growing demand for unique, natural, organic, and ethnic foods.

By properly developing their specialty foods departments, retailers have an opportunity to attract more consumers into their stores and build both sales and profits, according to the 2002 Specialty Foods Survey developed exclusively for the National Grocers Association (N.G.A.). The report was conducted by Dakota Worldwide, a Bloomington, Minnesota based market research company, and presented at the association's Annual Convention and Concept Show, held February 11-14 at the Paris Las Vegas Hotel in Las Vegas, Nevada.

The study revealed that specialty foods departments, if developed correctly, can establish the independent retailer as a special stop for consumers looking for a large variety of quality merchandise. It also shows that while the opportunity exists for retailers, these merchants must incorporate a number of strategies to fully take advantage of them.

"If retailers want to make a dent in the specialty foods business they must make a commitment to the category," explained Elliott Olson, chairman of Dakota Worldwide. "To do so, retailers will have to attack this issue one store at a time and one consumer at a time. They have to show that they are serious about the specialty food business."

The study found that retailers are catching on to the benefits of specialty foods. Nearly all of the 140 retailers surveyed said that a proper specialty foods display did much to enhance their overall product selection and variety, produced higher sales per customer, and improved margins. However, the report also revealed that some retailers are not doing enough with specialty foods given its ability to differentiate retailers from the competition.

Rosengarten says that the typical supermarket has about 30,000 SKUs with just 1,500 to 2,000 devoted to specialty foods. "This is proof that retailers do not seem to realize the true impact of specialty foods," he said. "If they want to compete with the large supercenters and Wal-Mart they need to create an environment that can enhance the store image."

N.G.A. president and CEO Thomal K. Zaucha adds that the findings of the report once again show independent, community-based retailers can develop niches that separate them from their larger competitors. "This report reveals that we can utilize specialty foods to attract consumers to our stores based on the fact that they cannot get the product and service elsewhere," he stated. "Independent retailers and wholesalers need to take advantage of these things to set themselves apart."

FACT: Every day, 3,000 young people become regular smokers. In fact, almost all nicotine addictions begin before the age of eighteen.

FACT: Our state law restricting the sale of tobacco products to minors is designed to protect our youth from an unhealthy addiction that they may continue throughout their lives.

FACT: Checking I.D.'s is the key element of a successful program to halt the sale of tobacco products to minors.

FACT: Michigan's merchants continue to do an excellent job of checking I.D.'s despite the fact they often face harassment. A recent 2002 Youth Tobacco Compliance checks in Detroit, indicated that out of 411 stores visited, 92 stores sold to minors.

Adolph Coors Co. plans to reintroduce Zima

Adolph Coors Co., the No. 3 U.S. brewer, may join with another company to offer spirits-based drinks and plans to reintroduce Zima, its flavored, clear malt drink, in core markets, the company said. Speaking to financial analysts and institutional investors in New York, Coors executives said the company will introduce new marketing for Zima, which has been a weak seller in recent years after a strong introduction.

Golden, Colorado-based Coors, known for such beer brands as Coors Light and Killian's, also said it will introduce a new product, which it called "Zima’s wild cousin." The company said it was considering some new spirits-based drinks, and was in discussions with other companies. —Reuters

FMI establishes security center

Food Marketing Institute (FMI) President and CEO Tim Hammonds and National Infrastructure Protection Center (NIPC) Director Ronald L. Dick signed an agreement establishing a public/private sector partnership with the Food Industry Information Sharing and Analysis Center (ISAC) led by FMI.

The Food Industry ISAC has a three fold mission:
- Provide information and analysis that will enable the food industry to report, identify and reduce its vulnerabilities to malicious attack, and to recover from any attacks as quickly as possible.
- Help the NIPC and FBI's Weapons of Mass Destruction Operations Unit identify credible threats and craft specific warning messages for the industry.
- Have experts available to help the NIPC and FBI assess specific threats.

ISAC's serve as voluntary industry contact points for gathering, analyzing and disseminating information between companies and the multi-agency NIPC based at the FBI headquarters in Washington, DC. This new initiative does not replace any existing mechanisms for reporting criminal or terrorist incidents to law enforcement bodies or regulatory agencies, Hammonds said. "The purpose of the Food Industry ISAC is to centralize this information so that patterns can be identified and threats can be assessed in the light of data gathered by federal national security agencies."

Established by a Presidential Directive, NIPC serves as the nation's assessment, warning and law enforcement entity for threats or attacks against the nation's critical infrastructures. All other executive branch departments are directed to share information about threats, warnings and actual attacks with NIPC. Seven industry ISACs have been established: Food, Oil & Gas, Electric Power, Banking & Finance, Information Technology, Telecommunications, and Water

America looks Down Under for great wine and good wine values

By Michele MacWilliams

Price and quality are the two main reasons that Australian wines are becoming increasingly popular in the U.S. “The American dollar is worth twice in Australia what it is worth here,” says Barry Downing of General Wine and Liquor, which distributes many Australian wines.

“The Australians have been making exceptional wine for many years,” says Downing. “America is discovering them now, because of their price structure.”

Downing says that the Australians are “culturally exciting people who love their wine.” Although the continent has a population of just 19 million, Downing says that they consume as much wine as we do in the states.

Some very fine wines are coming out of Australia. In fact, one of the world’s most exquisite, rare and highest rated wines comes from South Australia: Penfolds Grange Hermitage. Rated 97 points and named wine of the year by Wine Spectator magazine, it is the favorite wine of Jacques Nasser, Ford Motor’s recently fired CEO.

Christopher Cook, the wine writer for the Oakland Press, says that it is one of the most sought-after wines from anywhere in the world. The current release, the 1997, retails from $185 to $200 and up. “The quantities of Grange vary each year, but are pretty small. Because it is in such demand, Penfolds has allocated about 500 bottles to Michigan,” Cook writes in his November 5, 2001 column.

But Australia doesn’t only produce expensive wines. Lindemans, a winery synonymous with affordability, is the first to come to mind when talking value. The multi-district blends made by Lindemans have nearly 40 years of history. The success of the winery is founded upon their consistency, quality and affordable price.

For value, Elias Francis of General Wine recommends selections from one of the oldest wineries in Australia, Wyndham Estate, which started in 1828. Yangarra Park and Jacobs Creek are also favorites. “Customers bought pallets of Jacobs Creek at the AFD Holiday Show,” says Francis. “It is a very good wine for the retail price of between $7.99 and $8.99.”

Yangarra Park is the Australian winery of Kendall Jackson. Customers familiar with the Kendall Jackson quality and consistency will also find the same attributes in their counterpart from Down Under. The price is as palatable as well, retailing from $9.99 to $10.99 for their Cabernet, Chardonnay, Merlot or Shiraz.

Downing points to Penfolds Grange/Shiraz/Cabernet Sauvignon 1999. Retailing at $11.99, he believes it is one of the nicest wines in its price range.

From the table wines of Lindemans to Penfolds Grange Hermitage, the variety and price range of the wines from Down Under offer something for every wine lover.

The winemaking regions of Australia

Australia’s winemaking regions lie in the southern portion of the continent, primarily in South Australia and Victoria. Because the continent is so large and the population so small, the Aussies can be choosy when it comes to their grape-growing regions. Downing says that the Southern Australia has some of the most versatile areas for growing grapes in the world.

Hovering around 1,500 feet in elevation with a typically cool climate, the Adelaide Hills region is well suited for high quality white wines, while the warm inland district of Barossa Valley remains the heartland of Australia’s wine heritage. Big, ripe styles of wine are the order of the day here. Renowned for producing intensely floral Rieslings, the Clare Valley also performs with succulent flavored Shiraz and Cabernet Sauvignon.

Home of the “terra rossa” soils and limestones, Coonawarra’s cool climate makes it the area for Australia’s leading premium red wines with intense, deep flavors. Eden Valley is a cool region with many vineyards situated high on exposed hillsides; the longer growing season results in perfumed Rieslings and elegant reds.

The maritime influence from the nearby Gulf St. Vincent provides a temperate growing season and rich, powerful red and white wines in the McLaren Vale and the cool climate of Padthaway provides a consistent and productive.

In New South Wales, the Hunter Valley experiences regular drought and floods and would seem to be an improbable place to grow grapes. Nevertheless, since 1825, vigneron persisted, and have been amply rewarded and produce benchmark, classically Australian Shiraz and Semillon.

Yarra Valley, in Victoria, is a jewel in Australia’s vineyard landscape. The cool climate district is not only one of the most picturesque, but also makes some of Australia’s finest Pinot Noir and Chardonnay.

Also in Victoria, Great Western’s high summer daytime temperatures and cold nights result in spicy, Rhone-like reds and whites.

Finally, a far flung outpost of Australian viticulture, Margaret River sits on the ruggedly beautiful southwestern coast. The district enjoys an excellent climate with warm, dry summers. Cabernet Sauvignon, Chardonnay and Semillon all excel.
People support replacing the bottle deposit law with comprehensive recycling because:

- Michigan’s recycling rate is at only 17.6 percent—far below the 27 percent average of all other Great Lakes states.
- Michigan voters would replace the deposit law with comprehensive recycling first.
- The more voters learn, the more likely they are to support changing the current Michigan bottle deposit law to a new comprehensive recycling program. In order, they prefer: changing the deposit law to comprehensive recycling with curbside pick-up (35 percent); leaving the existing deposit law exactly as it is (24 percent); expanding the deposit law with recycling redemption centers (16 percent); expanding the deposit law with in-store drop-offs (15 percent.)

Support for expanding the bottle deposit law drops

Despite initial support for expanding the bottle deposit law, support for expansion drops by more than 25 percent, and strong opposition to expansion nearly triples once people know about expansion. Here’s why:

- The current deposit law only reduces waste by two percent; expansion only reduces waste by another .5 percent.
- Costs would increase by 8-cents per container.
- It would be difficult to maintain a safe environment for food handling.
- It won’t reduce litter.
- It would be inconvenient to stores to return all the additional containers.

Opposition to expansion has broad-based support when voters learn more

- Location – Support for expansion drops significantly—by two-thirds—on the west side of the state, in metro Detroit, and in Northern Michigan. Support is cut in half in the Thumb and the Cadillac/Traverse City/Soo. Support drops by almost half in mid-Michigan. In Macomb County, support drops completely off the map. from 71 percent to .8.
- Party affiliation – Republicans move the most, with support for expansion dropping from 59 percent to 10 percent. Support from ticket splitters and Democrats drops by slightly more than half.
- Gender – Male support for expansion drops by almost half; female by more than two-thirds.

A majority support ending deposits and increasing recycling

Despite the huge success of Michigan’s existing bottle deposit law, a majority of others, 57 percent, support ending the current deposit law and increasing recycling, either with curbside pick-up or at drop-off redemption centers, for all types of trash (including soft drink and beer containers). Only a third oppose the concept. Support is especially strong in Macomb County, at 71 percent, and in mid-Michigan, at 68 percent. Support is consistent across all party lines, but is slightly higher among young adults (64 percent aged 18-34) and women (60 percent).

Chiquita rebirth has investors, rivals eyeing bid

A group of U.S. and Latin American investors, led by investment banker Latin America Finance Group, may bid $800 million for the banana producer, which is about to emerge from bankruptcy under a reorganization plan set last November. The group's interest may spark a response from rival fruit producers Dole and Fyffes. Chiquita's creditors are expected to take over 95.5% of the company on Friday if the reorganization plan is approved by a U.S. bankruptcy court. No formal offer has been made yet.

Kellogg Vice Chairman to retire

Former Keebler CEO instrumental in integration of two companies

Sam K. Reed, Kellogg Co. vice chairman and member of the board of directors, retired effective March 26. He is not standing for re-election to the board.

During his career, Reed served as president and chief executive officer of Keebler Foods Co. from 1996 until its acquisition by Kellogg in March 2001. He was named to his current Kellogg positions at the time of the acquisition.

"Sam was an invaluable asset to Kellogg Company during the acquisition of Keebler and has played a key leadership role in the successful and smooth integration of the two companies," said Carlos M. Gutierrez, Kellogg chairman and chief executive officer. "In addition to the great Keebler brands, we will continue to benefit from the state-of-the-art distribution system and information technology infrastructure which he helped leverage into competitive assets at Keebler and which are now part of Kellogg's business."

Jack Daniel's joins 'Malternatives' rush

Brown-Forman Corp said it plans to introduce a Jack Daniel's flavored malt alcohol beverage this summer in a partnership with Miller Brewing Co., Reuters reported.

Miller will produce and distribute the new drink, which will be available this summer, Brown-Forman said.

Miller has already made several other forays into the growing 'malternatives' sector, teaming with Skyy Spirits, makers of premium Skyy vodka, to make a malt beverage called SKYY Blue, as well as planning to launch Stolichnaya Citrona and Sauza Diablo in May.

Stolichnaya Citrona offers a blend of citrus and other natural flavors containing Stoli's Russian-inspired clear bottle and red and gold graphics. Sauza Diablo features dark, "devilish" packaging with Sauza's signature logo.

Available in six-pack bottles, 12-pack bottles, and 24-bottle cases, both Stolichnaya Citrona and Sauza Diablo contain five percent alcohol by volume, the companies said. A six-pack will cost $6.69, a spokesperson for Allied Domecq told Reuters.

Pepsi, Starbucks team for 'DoubleShot' Cold Coffee

Starbucks Corp. and PepsiCo plan to sell cold bottled coffee under the Starbucks DoubleShot label, Bloomberg News Service reported. The new beverage is set to go on sale this month. DoubleShot is different from Starbucks Frappuccino bottled drink, said company spokeswoman Megan Behrbaum. Frappuccino is a milky coffee drink that comes in six flavors, while DoubleShot has a strong coffee flavor, she said. Ready-to-drink coffee products have had "significant growth" in the past three years, Behrbaum said. In a related development, PepsiCo said it plans to launch Mr. Green, a green-tinted carbonated beverage with caffeine and ginseng, under its SoBe line, according to Beverage Digest magazine. Not all Pepsi bottlers are expected to initially distribute the new brand, the magazine said, because Mr. Green is formulated to taste similar to Dr Pepper, which is also carried by a number of Pepsi bottlers.
